Brief History of Ayurveda education in BHU

The city of Varanasi has been an important center for Ayurveda learning since ancient times. Dhanwantari, who once happened to be the King of Varanasi, was himself a skillful surgeon who trained Sushruta in surgical skills. Sushruta, who practiced surgery in Varanasi and wrote an authoritative textbook on surgical techniques known as Sushruta Samhita, is believed to have lived in 6th century BC. Varanasi is also related historically to the life of Buddha. Buddha, who happens to have been referred to as a physician (Bhisakko), delivered his first sermon in Sarnath, a place situated near Varanasi. Since these ancient times, Ayurveda was taught continuously in various ‘Gharana’s of Kashi.

Banaras Hindu University was established through an Act of parliament in 1916 because of the long and untiring efforts of visionaries such as Pt. Madan Mohan Malaviya and many of his associates. This university is the largest residential university of Asia and is spread over an area of 16.5 sq. kms. The university continues to be one of the prestigious central universities of India.

Considering the continuity of traditional Ayurveda practice in Varanasi, Mahamana Madan Mohan Malaviya felt a need to incorporate Ayurveda education in Banaras Hindu University. He thought this step was essential to bring Ayurveda on the center stage in the national scenario. In 1922 the Ayurveda was introduced under the faculty of Oriental Learning and Theology of Banaras Hindu University, which was later upgraded to Ayurvedic College. Later, in 1924, Maharaja Sir Prabhu Narayan Singhji of Banaras laid the foundation stone of the Ayurvedic Hospital. Malaviyaji himself had a profound knowledge in Ayurveda and therefore, he was nominated as the President of Ayurveda Mahasammelana in 1926.

Another milestone in the Banaras Hindu University with respect to Ayurveda education was achieved when, father of the nation, Mahatma Gandhi laid down the foundation stone of the Ayurveda College in 1942 on the occasion of 25th convocation of BHU. In the year 1960 the Ayurvedic College was converted to the College of Medical Sciences with Professor K.N. Udupa as its founder principal.

The postgraduate Ayurveda education in BHU was started in 1963 with the inception of Postgraduate Institute of Indian Medicine. In the year 1970, this was merged with the Institute of Medical Sciences. In the year 1999, the undergraduate BAMS program was re-started in the Faculty of Ayurveda.
